Photoshop has a lot of features. It's a huge program with a zillion options that can be overwhelming to even seasoned photographers who want to use it to cut and paste images or edit their old photos. Photoshop is not designed to automatically detect the type of media that you want to use, so you're required to tell Photoshop exactly what file type you want to open. When you open Photoshop, go to File > New and choose from the Media Type drop-down menu: You might get a choice for an Adobe RGB image, a Windows RGB image, a Color Separation file, a Photo RGB file, and so on. Photoshop uses color spaces to separate images into three different color channels. You can also choose to open Photoshop with more media types, such as TIFF, EPS, PDF, and so on. In this article, we'll focus on opening Photoshop with Photoshop's basic Adobe RGB color space. If your computer has the Internet Explorer browser installed, you can also run Photoshop using an Internet Explorer window with this browser's icon in the taskbar. Photoshop on Linux You can also run Photoshop on a Linux computer, but it will be installed in your home folder. If your computer has the gnome desktop manager installed, you can start Photoshop with this menu under System > Preferences > Computer > Graphics. Photoshop's icon will look like this: The free GIMP As a free alternative to Photoshop, GIMP is a powerful open source image manipulation program that's been around since the beginning of the digital age. Unlike Photoshop, however, GIMP doesn't have the incredible array of features that Photoshop does, such as the variety of Photoshop extensions that let you achieve more out of Photoshop. GIMP is in the Python programming language, like Photoshop. It's free, doesn't install a lot of windows on your computer, and doesn't hog a lot of computer resources. How to open Photoshop When you open Photoshop, a dialog box called the Preferences dialog box opens. In this dialog box

I started with for the right side, in case of non-consecutive numbers, but this solution doesn't work. So, I need to understand how to obtain a result without a loop. A: just: var len = Math.min(Math.abs(left), Math.abs(right)) where left and right are variables of the left and right side, i.e. x-coordinates of the top left and bottom right corners of the rectangle. [A new-onset hypercalcemia. Transient post-renal tubular phosphate loss producing secondary hyperparathyroidism]. Hypercalcemia is a common disorder in elderly patients. Causes of hypercalcemia are parathyroid carcinoma, hyperparathyroidism, and transient myeloma-related hypercalcemia. Here, we report the patient who had a new-onset hypercalcemia and was found to have a transient post-renal tubular phosphate loss. A 68-year-old woman presented with general fatigue and anorexia. Laboratory findings showed mild anemia with hypoalbuminemia. An initial plasma calcium level was 14 mg/dL. After parathyroid hormone (PTH) assay, she was diagnosed as having hypercalcemia (14.7 mg/dL). Ionized calcium was 3.47 mmol/L. Serum intact PTH (iPTH) level was 49 pg/mL. Urinary calcium was not elevated. eGFR was 75 mL/min. Serum phosphate, parathyroid hormone (PTH) receptor antibody (PTH-RA) was undetectable. Cytopenia was not observed. Abdominal computed tomography revealed no apparent masses, and chest X-ray was normal. Bone scintigraphy showed no abnormal uptake. Upon diagnosis of primary hyperparathyroidism, treatment with bisphosphonate was performed. Plasma PTH rose to 77 pg/mL, and serum calcium level decreased to 12.3 mg/dL. On the other hand, plasma phosphorus level was low, and urinary calcium excretion was normal. PTH-RA became detectable after starting treatment. On admission, cyclophosphamide and prednisolone were prescribed. After that, PTH-RA levels were high in the following month. However, PTH-RA did not normalize and the patient required calcium supplementation for the same period. An increase in PTH-RA was observed after starting calcitriol treatment. In this patient, hypercalcemia was caused by a transient post-renal tubular phosphate loss.
