The new motion capture technology is being developed by the same teams responsible for the award-winning FIFA '15 Move the Player, motion capture technology. It has provided the core technological foundation of FIFA '17 Player Intelligence and could be used as a foundation for player animations. The new motion capture technology enables more accurate real-life player movement, incorporating up to four individuals, each equipped with a head and four shoulder-mounted cameras. The cameras use the player's body movements to track their movements in real time, as they are evaluated and loaded into the game engine. "The number of players can be chosen by the user," said David Rutter, Senior Producer at EA SPORTS. "FIFA '22 will allow players to tailor the experience to suit their needs." Prospective players will also enjoy a slick matchmaker, which will recommend a team of up to four players based on match type and time of day. Developers also added several new player attributes to the game, including increased sprint speed, better ball control and better body strength. For the first time in the series, developers have improved ball physics and augmented reality visuals. The FIFA '22 new ball physics improve ball control by providing players with more precision and a smoother ball trajectory, while the player characteristics will react differently depending on the ball. The addition of augmented reality is now available in every stadium, helping players to visualise playing styles for the opponents in real-time. FIFA '22 has also introduced various new features, including an all-new international tournament mode and the introduction of Player Legends. As previously announced, Player Legends are crucial to the core gameplay of FIFA '22. Global stars from 23 nations will grace playable player slots for FIFA '22. Players can be scanned for their likeness using the UEFA Pro Builder or transferred into the game using the new FIFA '22 Player Motion Tagging functionality. "PlayStation is the undisputed leader of the sports game industry, and FIFA '22 delivers on everything our fans have come to expect from EA SPORTS titles," said Andrew Wilson, Senior Director of Marketing at EA SPORTS. "As the community sees, this year's release is a true celebration of football." Prospective players can take on the new 'International Champions Cup', a new FIFA mode where different national teams from

A series of community-based competitions tailored for the FIFA audience and its vast array of skill sets. Does the "Old School Mode" let you choose players that are not available? This is a question I've been asked a lot over the past few months, as EA Sports' video sharing portal, YouTube, has been whipping up some online debate about the mode's design. But it's a fair question. What I can tell you is that, for the first time in a FIFA game, the 'old school' mode works more like a traditional single-player mode and the 'new school' mode works more like a traditional online multiplayer mode. So in the 'new school' mode, you select a team, pick individual players on the team by controlling a virtual pitch and then pick out various objectives from a pre-set list. You could, for instance, try to score with every player on your team, score with every attacker, only score with midfielders and defenders, score with specific players, or even score with every player on the field that have scored in the previous 5 matches played in this mode. But the 'old school' mode actually lets you pick whatever players you want, regardless of whether they're already available or not. So that was a little bit of a surprise. And it also lets you select coaches and task them with specific actions. For instance, you can select a new coach and have them show up on the pitch and then ask them to defend their team to try and score less goals than their opponent. Or you can select a coach, tell them to win the match by scoring more goals than their opponent, then pick a specific player on the field and tell him to run a specific
