What's new:

- In the year 615 AD a large band of renegades known as the "Frankish" invaders thrust an army into the Catholic west. Their westward thrust was two centuries in the making and began with westward expansion into the heartland of Latin Christianity. The Frankish moved into Gaul (modern day France and Belgium) beginning in the year 567 AD and eventually established the kingdom of the Franks in the year 576. They spoke the early spelling of the Frankish language known as the Frankish language. The Franks brought many important foundational aspects of western civilization to Europe starting in the 6th century AD: The Franks brought to Europe the areas and their language later to become French, Low German, Swiss, and German. The Franks brought to Europe first and foremost, a connection between the Catholic Church and its people. The Franks were the founding world leaders of Christianity's visible and spiritual center in the west - the Catholic Church. The Franks' social system set forth a working, property-owning class which later transformed society to the founding what became known as the Bildungsreich. The Franks adopted many cultural and social features of Roman Catholic Europe. The Franks not only brought to Europe Christianity's underlying philosophy and allegiance that people who believe differently from the majority should not be attacked and persecuted, but the Franks developed a call for "Christian Unity" which in practice became known as "Christian Roman Empire." The Franks also brought to Europe the seed of a military class that helped create the basis for economic stability. The Franks brought their culture and traditions to Europe and were the driving force behind a series of standing armies in the western region that made peace a reality. The Franks brought to Europe both good as well as evil. The most significant sin brought to Europe by the Franks was the original sin of Christianity: licentiousness. While the sin is not preached in the Roman Catholic Franciscan or Dominical churches in the Netherlands today, by focusing on the baptismal or conversion of the Franks, the church focuses on the role that the Franks play in a solution to the original sin and to the subsequent sins against the Church, Rome, and the west. _____ The 1934 genocide of the indigenous people on the Italian fascist regime's colonies in Ethiopia was the first genocide of its kind in recorded history. The Vatican was well aware and reported it directly to Mussolini's
