Chemopreventive Agent? Malignant tumours are associated with strong production of reactive oxygen species (ROS), which eventually leads to cell death. Chemopreventive agents are known to modulate redox balance and induce cell survival. Glucomannan is an isolated polysaccharide from the Japanese konjac root, and has been shown to exhibit anticarcinogenic activity. It exhibits chemopreventive potential through modulation of reactive oxygen species (ROS) and reactive nitrogen species (RNS) in cells, thereby influencing the cancer cell signal transduction pathway. The two most popular mechanisms attributed for the anticarcinogenic activity of glucomannan include its ability to inhibit cellular growth, DNA synthesis and angiogenesis. This article reviews the basis and mechanism of anticarcinogenic properties of glucomannan, with particular emphasis on its role as a potential chemopreventive agent.Q: Unexpected result with relational division on I2C bus I'm working with an I2C bus and I was using the following setup to act as a slave #define SCL_PIN 4 // PN5 #define SDA_PIN 6 // PN7 #define SCL_GPIO_PIN 5 #define I2C_CLOCK_CHANNEL 0x44 #define I2C_DATA_CHANNEL
